To: '38(1)b@highland.gov.uk'

Hi there. Just as a further update I have been advised that the fuel and other chemicals will be removed from the sunken vessel over the next couple of days, so barring any unforeseen incidents with that there should be no risk or danger of contamination. I will update again if there once I'm notified of the removal of the possible dangers.

Regards

Hi there. Just to make you aware that we have been advised of a fish farm barge sunken at mooring by Portree. The information provided thus far suggests that the vessel is intact and there is no fuel or chemical spillage, but that there will be some plastic detritus from the vessel in the water. I've checked with our shellfish team and there is a Cockle bed 2.3km away (Loch Portree Cockles) from the sunken vessel.

Just something to be aware of, Marine Scotland are monitoring the situation and will advise if the situation deteriorates.

Kind Regards,
